Existing system & Limitations

Generic Career Portals :

Provide standardized advice and job listings without personalization, making it difficult for users to receive tailored guidance.

Online Learning Platform :

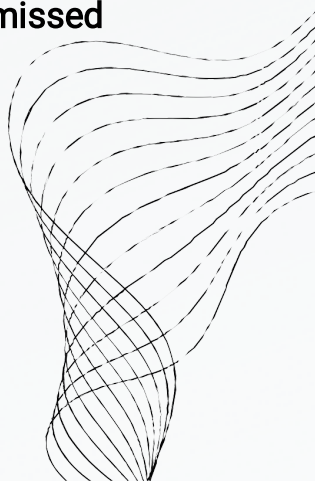

Focus mainly on skill development but lack integration with real-time career planning or job matching, leaving users without a clear career path.

Traditional Career Counseling Services:

Often expensive, time-consuming, and inaccessible for many users; advice may not stay current with industry trends or individual needs.

Job Matching Websites:

Basic keyword-based matching fails to account for user potential, skills, and career aspirations, leading to irrelevant or missed opportunities.

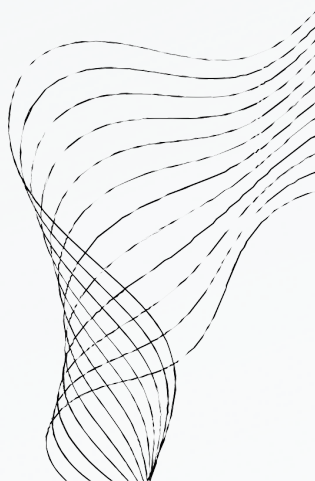

Mentorship Platforms:

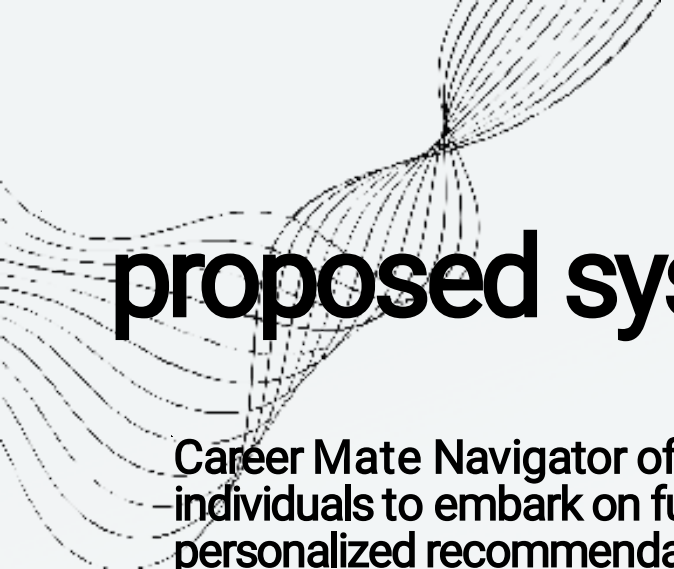

Limited access to mentors, and interactions may lack structure or follow-up, making it hard for users to benefit consistently.

Professional Networking Sites:

Overwhelming for users without clear goals; networking quality depends heavily on personal initiative and existing connections.

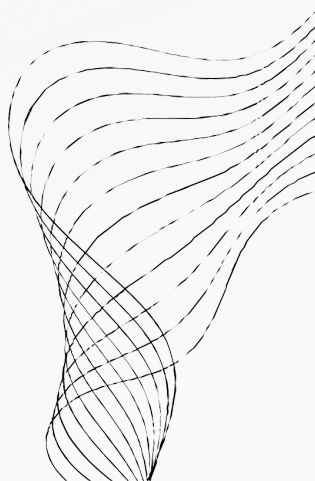

University Career Centers: Often focus solely on students and recent graduates, neglecting mid-career professionals seeking growth or transition opportunities.
